I wish to extend my thanks to Peter Barton, whose help in the process of completion of this volume has been invaluable, and to August Obermayer. Without Gustl's perseverance and hard work to keep OGS going over many years, this and all the other volumes in this series would not exist.

My gratitude goes to all those friends and colleagues who have embarked on this project a year ago, when we all lived in a different world, or so it seemed. Little did we know back then, in 2019, that the 30th anniversary of 1989 would be another Wende year, one of many W/ende(n).

Without the ongoing, fun and stimulating conversations with my dear friend Anke, this book would have not come into being. Andreas Leusink plays an essential part in the volume's prehistory: he is the main character in the story of the year I spent in Ost Berlin (1986-87). Andreas, you opened my eyes to different worlds. Our chats on the theatre, literature, and the arts in the GDR, or indeed Italy (where you finally came to visit!), I know, will never end, irrespective of where we are: Berlin, Brandenburg, Torino or perhaps New Zealand. And Walli? You are the bedrock of my love for Berlin, and –of course– Münster. Without you, I would have never experienced the cultural politics of this very special city, before 1989, after 1989, and since then.

A big thank you goes to Katie Trumpener whose volcanic, creative mind has inspired me and continues to sustain me through all the years I have spent in academia, years that have seen universities around the world drastically change in directions that have seldom taken the paths we would have wished or had imagined. To keep the imagination alive in less than welcome circumstances I always turn to you, Katie, and your precious example.

My time in Chicago was precious indeed: I can't imagine the past thirty years without Tom and Marta. You have kept me coming back for more: more friendship, more warmth, more vibrant and exciting discussions, whether about art, music, or books. Chicago lives in me through you.

A thought here is for Vreni, whom I will always remember as one of the most exquisite, eloquent, and generous people I have ever met. Vreni's stories, from all corners of the world, and in multiple languages, turned Hyde Park into a small cosmopolitan centre, and made living there an adventure.

Too many others I ought to thank here. Apologies for keeping you in mind but not writing down your names. One name however must still be mentioned, Silvia's. You have welcome me back, to my alma mater in Torino, as if I had never left. Thanks to you, Silvia, old shores have morphed into new horizons.

I owe it to Gautam that a truly new horizon, one far away from everything I had ever known, has opened in the last few years. The vast landscape of China has now entered my field of vision, leaving an indelible mark.

Last but not least I dedicate this book to my parents: to my mother, who has lived her life to the fullest, for almost a century: actually, two! Magda, you have always been able to infuse meaning and find purpose in every struggle you have witnessed and taken part in. You have taught me: we are politics and politics is we. More of your revolutionary courage is needed nowadays. To my father, who, in the 1950s –at the heart of the Cold War—argued, in his law dissertation, that Germany would be united one day. Under what circumstances, I now forget...
